WHERE IS STUDENTS’ MENTAL HEALTH GOING?
AFRICA: A NEW DAWN OF INTERNATIONALISATION
LIFE CYCLE OF INTERNATIONAL OFFICES
INTERNATIONAL ALUMNI MATTER
“Internationalisation is a reality that Africa has to deal with.”
JAMES JOWI FROM THE AFRICAN NETWORK FOR INTERNATIONALISATION OF EDUCATION

“Successful and loyal alumni represent a community that is just too influential to ignore.”
INTERNATIONAL ALUMNI MATTER

“International office? What international office?”
LEONARD ENGEL, EAIE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
Contents

EAIE UPDATES

EAIE ACADEMY REVIEW
Breaking new ground

CHANNELLING KNOWLEDGE
The SAFSA Mentorship Programme

CALENDAR

SPOTLIGHTS

STUDENT MENTAL HEALTH
A growing concern for universities

INTERNATIONALISATION: A LUXURY OR AN OPPORTUNITY?
Mexican mobility in focus

PROFESSOR DZULKIFLI ABDUL RAZAK
An interview

IRISH HIGHER EDUCATION
Lighting the fires of creativity

TALKING HEAD
An interview with Pam Fredman

FEATURES

AFRICA: A NEW DAWN OF INTERNATIONALISATION
Rising up to the challenge

INTERNATIONAL WEEKS: THE KEY TO SUCCESS
Top tips and an exemplary case study

INTERNATIONAL ALUMNI MATTER
Finding a way to connect

LIFECYCLE OF INTERNATIONAL OFFICES
To centralise or decentralise international efforts?

WHY IT’S PROBABLY NOT WORTH GOING TO UNIVERSITY ANY MORE
Rousing views on the future of higher education

---

Published by
European Association for International Education
PO Box 1189, 1001 GD Amsterdam, the Netherlands
TEL +31-20-344 51 00, FAX +31-20-344 51 19
E-MAIL info@eaie.org, www.eaie.org

Editor Michael Cooper

Publications Committee Michael Cooper (Chair), Linda Johnson, Laura Howard, Timo Ahonen, Frank Wittmann, Laura Ripoll

Marketing & Communications Manager Elise Kuurstra
Graphic Designer Nhu Nguyen
Publications Coordinator Sarah Fencott
E-MAIL publications@eaie.org

Advertising
Contact geraghty@eaie.org for more information.
The EAIE welcomes requests for advertising space from companies and organisations whose aims and values are compatible with those of the Association and its members. Acceptance of advertising does not imply endorsement by the EAIE.

Printed by Drukkerij Raddraaier, Amsterdam

Copyright © 2012 by the EAIE
All rights reserved. Extracts from Forum may be reproduced with permission of the Editor. Unless stated otherwise, opinions expressed by contributors do not necessarily reflect the position of the EAIE.

Cover photography Michele Cozzolino (shutterstock)

ISSN 1389-0808
In the past few years, internationalisation has gained much currency and is impacting the activities of universities globally. The overwhelming forces of globalisation have played a part in driving this development. Though Africa has been influenced by global forces for many years, its higher education system is now caught by the increasingly complex realities posed by internationalisation and globalisation.

“Pray the Devil back to hell!” These were some of the opening words by Leymah Gbowee in her keynote speech during the 2010 EAIE Conference in Nantes, France. This was the powerful voice of an enigmatic African woman who, one year later, received the prestigious Nobel Peace prize and thus added more honour to a continent always put at the footnote of world happenings.

Important to the very few Africans in that forum was Leymah’s convincing challenge to universities on their global responsibilities, which, if accepted, could make the world a much better place to live in. Her main call was for Western universities to collaborate fairly with their African counterparts. She pictorially narrated the challenges facing the higher education sector in Africa and the transformations that partnerships were already creating. I celebrated her as a champion of fair internationalisation.

RISING TO THE CHALLENGE

In one of the sessions during the 2011 EAIE Conference in Copenhagen, Philip Altbach, Professor at the Centre for International Higher Education, Boston College, US, expressed his worries about the future of higher education in Africa compared to the transformations in other parts of the world. He enumerated the many challenges facing the continent.
years, debates on internationalisation have begun to pick up on the continent, seeking to address the realities of this inestimable phenomenon. African universities are now starting to recognise the importance of internationalisation, a phenomenon that in a real sense has been part of the system since its inception. To a large extent, internationalisation in Africa has been externally driven and now requires that Africa decides on its agenda for internationalisation and the strategies to pursue it. This approach could enable African universities to develop strategic responses to the risks and challenges of internationalisation and, in essence, maximise the opportunities.

INTErnAL InTErnATIonAlIsATIon

In addition to institutional initiatives, African governments and regional organisations are now taking deliberate steps to revitalise the higher education sector and develop structures that would foster internationalisation within the continent. Africa’s starting point would be to strengthen university collaborations within the continent to consolidate their areas of strength and develop a viable higher education and research area which they can then use to engage with the rest of the world. With this strategy, Africa can change its position as a bystander and become a real player in the global knowledge society. It is already becoming evident that through regional protocols and frameworks, especially within the SADC region and within the East African Community, student mobility and university cooperation are beginning to take root.

AFRICA nEEDs To TAkE ChARGe

While internationalisation is growing in importance and becoming central to higher education activities, policies and planning, it has created new realities for Africa. These new realities are compounding the challenges of increasing demand, quality concerns, low capacities, governance and research concerns facing the comparatively young and growing sector. In the past few mandate is to advance research, professional development, information sharing, and advocacy on internationalisation of higher education in Africa, is providing a new platform for engagement with internationalisation in Africa. In its third conference held in Abuja, Nigeria in 2011, ANIE brought together African university leaders and policy makers to discuss new policy directions for internationalisation in Africa. The priority areas they identified were for African universities to work together with development partners to strengthen their institutional capacities for research, enhance utilisation of ICT for teaching and learning, and to develop the next generation of African scholars.

A nEw PlATform for Afr ICAn EngAgEmEnT

The decision by Africa’s higher education sector to establish the African Network for Internationalisation of Education (ANIE) in 2009 has given new breath to internationalisation in Africa. ANIE, whose main

It has been touted that the 21st century belongs to Africa. This now seems elusive, however, in different aspects, Africa is rising. After decades of slow growth, Africa has the chance to continue rising. Africa has historically faced many odds and still continues to face quite a myriad of them, which have implications on how it steps into the future. Higher education presents one of the opportunities for continued growth. Internationalisation both within Africa and between Africa and other parts of the world also becomes key in this.